Paul Bert, who attended his consceration, was much affected by the ceremony, and actually remarked to him that, like St. Paul, he might take the road to Damasens. According to Mgr. Pinaud, M. Paul Bert's conversion did not end here He received the last sacraments from the hands of a Belgian priest, the Abbé Dovos, and breathed his last in a most religious frame of mind. An interesting letter on M. Paul Bert's last illness has also been published, in which the writer relates that on the 6th November, for the first time for thirteen days, the Resident-General was able to see his chief dreams he remarked that it would dispense him establishing a large tea plantation in the island. "from having recourse to Bishop Pugnier to go to Paradise." "At one moment," said Paul Bert,
"I felt that my spirit had freed itself from my body, and I fell into a kind of strange beatitude."
